Tree Care Spotlight

Balancing Tree Care & Construction in the Urban Forest

Construction is a necessary part of creating a livable environment for people in and around cities. Trees provide significant benefits to the environment and enrich neighborhoods and streets. Construction of new homes and other building creates a disturbance which can stress, damage, or kill trees.

Certain practices during construction can help minimize the disturbance that may negatively affect trees. Tree protection fences are one of the best ways to protect tree roots from erosion, soil compaction, and heavy equipment damage.

Urban foresters in Fairfax County work with developers to use sustainable practices to retain tree canopy and plant new trees to maximize the benefits of a healthy urban forest. Residents can help by controlling invasive plant species that adversely affect existing and newly planted trees and may lead to further stress.

The Green Column

Solid Waste Helps Capital Facilities Dispose of 785 Tons of Contaminated Dredge

Solid Waste and the Maintenance and Stormwater Management Division (MSMD) recently helped Capital Facilities' Utilities Design and Construction Division (UDCD) complete an aspect of a developer default project in the Sully District. As part of the Virginia Department of Transportation's (VDOT) street acceptance process for the 38,000 square-yard roadway system, VDOT required Fairfax County to remove sediment deposits from a 250-foot-long triple box culvert under Trinity Parkway before the state agency could inspect the culvert's structural integrity.

ECS, the UDCD's consultant took samples of the sediment and found that the material was contaminated with petroleum byproducts, which created a disposal challenge. Solid Waste Management Program staff reviewed the material test reports and offered to accept the material at the I-95 landfill complex in Lorton for a fixed fee. The price was significantly less than the cost of hauling the material to a private disposal facility. Between April 1 and May 10, ECS delivered 61 loads of dredge to the complex's lined ash pit, for a total of 785 tons.

On several occasions, MSMD staff lowered the stormwater pond below the culvert elevation so that the dredging work could be performed. One one occasion, MSMD provided a six-inch pump to lower the water elevation while clearing a blocked valve that was preventing the pond from draining. This effort eliminated a potential change order request from the contractor for delays and additional costs.

Noting the benefits of the team effort, Chris Meoli, senior engineer III, Solid Waste Management Program, said, "A shout out to our fine scale staff, operations (disposal) team, and site manager for partnering with CAP to help reduce costs, road miles, and greenhouse gas emissions!"
