A message from Kathy Smith

It looks like sunshine and clear skies are in the forecast for this weekend! Nearly five inches of rain fell on Fairfax County Monday morning, which caused property damage and several road closures. The county has a Disaster Damage Database System which is designed to allow residents to report residential damage caused by emergencies like hurricanes, tropical storms, and other disasters. The county can use this data to pursue disaster aid through the federal government to the extent such aid is available. Submission is voluntary and does not guarantee assistance. More information is below.

Sincerely,

Kathy

Record Rainfall Challenges Area Construction Sites

Nearly five inches of rain fell on Fairfax County Monday morning - nearly a month's worth of rain in just a few hours, overwhelming numerous parts of our public infrastructure. Many of the more than 1,650 construction sites in the county have Inspectors from the Site Development and Inspections Division (SDID) of Land Development Services (LDS) monitor each construction site in the county. LDS is committed to protecting communities and the environment from excessive run-off. If you observe a construction site that seems to have malfunctioning erosion and sedimentation controls, please submit your concern online via the Site Construction Hotline Submission Form or call 703-324-7470, TTY 711.

The Green Column

What is an Invasive Plant?

Invasive plants are a species accidentally or intentionally introduced by humans into a region where those plants did not originate. They can cause great damage to the new area's natural resources.

Naturalists encourage gardeners to curb the spread of invasive species by planting native plants and removing invasive ones. There are many websites that offer native alternatives, including: Virginia Native Plant Society, The Master Gardeners of Northern Virginia, and Green Spring Gardens.

Invasive species overtake native species and destroy ecosystems that rely upon diversity of species to survive. One example is kudzu, a plant that grows at a rate of one foot per day with mature vines as long as 100 feet. It engulfs everything in its path from trees to shrubs to homes and cars.

When visiting a plant nursery or accepting plants from friends and neighbors, avoid invasive species. Plant natives for their beauty and for the well-being of the environment.
